By Hand to Ulf Wiinberg

April 5, 2011

Dear Mr. Wiinberg,

I write on behalf of Cleve Foster and Humberto Leal, two prisoners currently incarcerated in the Texas Department of Criminal Justice (TDCJ) awaiting execution. Cleve Foster will be the first prisoner to be executed with Lundbeck pentobarbital in Texas, and is scheduled to die at 6pm tonight. Humberto Leal is scheduled to be executed by lethal injection on July 7, 2011.

It is therefore with great urgency that I draw your attention to some disturbing facts that have emerged in relation to the new execution procedure that will be used on Mr. Foster and Mr. Leal, and implore you to help prevent their undue suffering and death.

I understand that you have already communicated your ethical objections to your product being used in executions to the Texas authorities. Sadly, this gesture holds little weight in Texas, where the authorities receive letters of moral opposition to capital punishment every day. I am now appealing to you, and to all who work at Lundbeck, not as ethicists, but as scientists. I attach a new report that reveals some deeply troubling facts about the way pentobarbital has been incorporated into the lethal injection protocol in Texas – most notably, the dangerous lack of clinical regulation of the procedure by the state..

Lundbeck has not yet taken a public position on the clinical merit of Texas' new execution method, yet as the manufacturer of pentobarbital, there is no more influential voice than yours when it comes to the clinical use of your product. You have stated in the press that you want to do "all you can" to prevent your drugs being used in executions; I ask therefore that you read the attached report and write immediately to the Texas authorities detailing your position on the urgent issues it raises.

In summary, it has emerged that:

- Texas has failed to enact any legislation to ensure that the new use of Lundbeck pentobarbital is effective and humane. The lethal injection protocol is left to the sole discretion of the director of the Correctional Institutions Division of the TDCJ¹ – Rick Thaler, a prison official with no medical training. Acting on his discretion alone, Thaler hastily pushed through the amendment to the execution protocol, failing to obtain any meaningful clinical assessment of the possible effects of this new combination of drugs on the prisoner. In fact, prominent anesthesiologists agree that the combination of pentobarbital with pancuronium bromide and potassium chloride puts the prisoner at extreme risk of ‘serious undue pain and suffering’.²
- Texas has failed to enact any legislation to ensure that the individuals responsible for extinguishing human life with Lundbeck pentobarbital are properly trained and qualified. The Texas Code of Criminal Procedure states only, ‘the director of the Texas Department of Criminal Justice shall designate an executioner’.³ This means that prisoners will be put to death with Lundbeck pentobarbital not under the supervision of doctors and anesthesiologists—or even licensed veterinarians—but at the hands of a prison lethal injection team.
- The method by which Texas executes human beings with Lundbeck pentobarbital will therefore be riskier, less transparent, and have less oversight than the euthanasia of cats, dogs, birds, and lizards. Texas has enacted detailed regulations to ensure that animals suffer no pain when they are euthanized with pentobarbital. Animal euthanasia laws regulate acceptable methods of intravenous euthanasia down to the correct dosage per kilogram of an animal’s body weight, and provide strict certification requirements for euthanasia technicians. They also expressly forbid the ‘combination of pentobarbital with a neuromuscular blocking agent’,⁴ the very combination that the TCDJ has deemed suitable for the execution of human beings. Cleve Foster’s execution today, in stark and shocking contrast to the euthanasia of animals, will be conducted in a regulatory vacuum without any of the safeguards afforded even to fish, amphibians and reptiles.⁵

In advance of Cleve’s scheduled death tonight, I am asking Lundbeck to call on the Texas legislature to enact measures that provide at least the same protections to human beings condemned to die as they do for sick or unwanted animals. Cleve’s death is scheduled for 6pm Texas time, or 1am Copenhagen time. Lundbeck’s intervention could still halt his execution. This matter is therefore of the utmost urgency, and I would appreciate an immediate response.
